Rocky Mountain Resources Partners with Dig Media on Vanadium Investing News.com

Rocky Mountain Resources Corp. (“Rocky Mountain” or the “Company”) (RKY:TSX-V) and Dig Media Inc. announced a 12-month partnership with Vanadium Investing News.com (www.vanadiuminvestingnews.com), one of the newest additions to Dig Media’s network of commodity-focused websites that make up the Resource Investing News Network. Dig Media’s sites educate investors about what is influencing the markets, while providing branding and connecting opportunities for exploration and mining companies.

“Most vanadium is used as an additive for improving steel and in titanium alloys. Global steel demand and output is recovering, which is benefitting demand for vanadium. CPM Group analysts see the improving steel market as having a ‘bullish effect on the vanadium market’ in the next ten years and new projects will likely be needed to meet this demand,” said Nick Smith, Publisher.

“Strong demand is expected to keep vanadium prices at the high levels we have seen developing since 2002 when ferrovandium prices rose from around $7 per kg to nearly $62 in 2008,” Smith continued. “Although the global financial crisis in 2008 and the resulting recession pushed prices down below $19 per kg in May 2009, prices have climbed to nearly $35 per kg in May 2010.”

Rocky Mountain Resources President & CEO Bill Radvak added “the vanadium market will also benefit from advancements in renewable energy and energy storage such as in Vanadium Redox Batteries, which can safely store large amounts of energy with applications in wind, solar and critical storage systems.”

Vanadium Investing News.com will provide our investor audience insight on the macro economics influencing the Vanadium markets as well as specific insight into public companies that are both exploring and producing.
